

Addictive Culture : A Clinical Sociology Perspective

By: Jawad Fatayer.
United Arab Emirates University.
Sociology & Psychology Departments.
UAE.

Key Concepts: Culture, Mind, Addiction, Social Natural, Addiction types, Cognitive-Emotive Behavioral Therapy (CEBT) and Clinical Sociology.

Culture is conceived in this work as the totality of whatever man has had produced in life, be it material things - as simple as pencil to space shuttle - and or non -material -as values, beliefs, norms ideology, language up to social - economic - political systems -.

The author argues that man is a unique cultural being. Unlike the rest of creatures in this universe, man's behavior is circumscribed by one's cultural norms, values, beliefs, customs, traditions, which tend to generally either oppose or compromise whatever society's collective or living of mind invents or as a new ideas , objects or method ... in life. problems to remedies

The author, thus, argues that one's behavior is a mere reflection to one's mind at one hand and society's mind on the other. As mind is seen in this work as a social process, stems out of social interaction